This Marist Poll Reports:

Turning Tides... Half View Obama as Not Meeting Expectations

For the first time since taking office, more registered voters in the United States think President Barack Obama is falling below their expectations than those who say he is either meeting or exceeding them. Half of voters -- 50% -- believe Mr. Obama has fallen short. 44%, on the other hand, report Mr. Obama has met or exceeded their expectations. 6% are unsure.

Public opinion has turned on this question. In March, a slim majority -- 51% -- said the president either reached their level of expectation or went above and beyond it. 45%, however, reported he missed the mark. 4% were unsure.

"As President Obama enters a critical time in his presidency, the national electorate has greater doubt over whether he is living up to their expectations of him," says Dr. Lee M. Miringoff, Director of The Marist College Institute for Public Opinion.

While there has been little change among Democrats and Republicans here, dissatisfaction has grown among independent voters. Nearly six in ten -- 58% -- report the president has disappointed them, and 34% view the president as meeting their expectations or going above and beyond them. 8% are unsure.

In Marist's March survey, 48% within this key voting block thought the president was not living up to their standards while 45% reported he either met or surpassed them.

Dissatisfaction with Obama Grows...Independents Key Players

Mr. Obama can't even look to his approval rating for a silver lining. Voters divide about the job the president is doing in office. Currently, 45% of registered voters nationwide disapprove of the president's job performance while 44% approve. 11% are unsure. Mr. Obama's approval rating equals his lowest rating -- 44% -- which he received in Marist's February survey.

The president continues to have a tough time winning over independent voters. In fact, there is a 12 percentage point spread between independents who disapprove and those who approve of the job Mr. Obama is doing in office. Nearly half -- 49% -- disapprove of the president's performance while 37% approve. 15% are unsure how to rate him. Three months ago, just 6 percentage points separated independents who praised and those who berated the president's job performance. 45% disapproved, and 39% approved. 16% were unsure.

Looking at Democrats across the country, there has been little change. 75% applaud the president while 14% disapprove. 11% are unsure. In March, 77% of Democrats gave Mr. Obama high marks while 15% thought he was falling short. 8%, at that time, were unsure how to rate him.

Fewer members of the GOP, compared with Marist's March survey, disapprove of President Obama's job performance. 78% now hold this view while 85% did so three months ago. However, the proportion of those who approve of the job Mr. Obama is doing is relatively unchanged. 14% of the national GOP currently give the president high marks while 11% did the same three months ago. More Republicans are unsure how to rate the president. 8% cannot currently weigh in compared with 4% in March.

Fewer View Obama as Improving the Nation... More Say Towing the Status Quo

To make matters worse for the president, fewer voters view him as changing the United States for the better. Currently, 38% describe the direction in which the president is moving the country as an improvement. This approximates the lowest rating the president has received on this question -- 37% -- which was reached in February. In Marist's March survey, 43% thought the president was changing the nation for the better.

However, the proportion of those who believe Mr. Obama is negatively impacting the nation has not grown. In fact, it has remained relatively flat. 38% report the president is changing the nation for the worse while 41% thought that way in March. Rather, more voters now say the president has not changed the country at all. More than one in five -- 21% -- believe this is true while 13% held this view in March.

Once again, independents make the difference. More than a quarter of these voters -- 27% -- believe Mr. Obama is doing the same ole political song and dance. This is a 12 percentage point increase from March when 15% thought the president was not bringing about change. 39% currently believe the president is changing the country for the worse, and 29% report he is changing the nation for the better. 5% are unsure. In March, 44% said the president was having a negative impact on the country, 35% thought he was making positive inroads, and 6% were unsure.

Obama's Favorability Hovers at 50%

President Obama still remains likeable in the eyes of voters, but there may be a crack in his armor. 50% view the president favorably while 43% have an unfavorable impression of him. 7% are unsure.

In Marist's March survey, a majority -- 53% -- thought well of him, 41% had less than a positive impression of him, and 6% were unsure.

Independents are the cause of the president's slight dip in favorability. They divide with 45% having a positive view of the president and 47% having a negative view of him. In March, there was a more positive opinion among these voters -- 49% to 43%, respectively.

Although nearly three-quarters of Republican voters -- 73% -- have an unfavorable view of Mr. Obama, 20% have a favorable view of him. That's a six percentage point increase in his favorability among the GOP since Marist's March survey.

80% of Democrats have a high opinion of the president compared with 85% in March.

Split Decision in Handling of the Economy

The national electorate is fractured when it comes to President Obama's handling of the economy. 46% of the electorate approve of how the president is addressing the issue while 48% disapprove. 6% are unsure.

Similar proportions of voters shared this view in March. At that time, 46% approved of Mr. Obama's economic management, 49% disapproved, and 5% were unsure.

And, voters still don't blame the president for the state of the economy. More than six in ten voters -- 62% -- think the president inherited the current economic conditions while 28% believe they are a result of his own policies. 10% are unsure.

In March, 64% thought the economic conditions were passed on to the president, 27% said they were Mr. Obama's doing, and 9% were unsure.

57% Say Obama's Handling of Gulf Spill No Better Than Bush's Katrina

President George Bush's handling of Hurricane Katrina was a black mark on his administration, and now, there's bad news for his successor. Nearly six in ten voters nationwide -- 57% -- say President Barack Obama's handling of the oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico is either the same or worse than Bush's handling of Katrina. This includes 34% who report Obama's management of the disaster is comparable and 23% who view it as worse. 37%, however, say he is handling the crisis better than Bush managed Katrina. 6% are unsure.

While nearly six in ten Democrats -- 59% -- believe the president is handling the crisis better than how his predecessor dealt with Hurricane Katrina, one-third of Democrats say Mr. Obama is dealing with it only about the same or worse. This includes 28% who say the president's management is on par with Mr. Bush's and 5% who report it is worse. Not surprisingly, most Republicans -- 80% -- believe President Obama has demonstrated equal or worse crisis management skills than President Bush. 44% think they are comparable, and 36% believe they are worse. 14% say he is handling it better. Independents align more with Republicans. 63% rank Obama's management as either on the same level as Bush or below the former president. This includes 34% who say he is on par with Bush and 29% who believe his handling is even worse. One-third of independent voters rate Mr. Obama's performance as better.

"Despite President Obama's frequent attempts to plug the hole in his public opinion, Republicans and independent voters have not taken heed," says Dr. Lee M. Miringoff, Director of The Marist College Institute for Public Opinion.

In fact, when it comes to Mr. Obama's overall handling of this environmental crisis, a majority of voters -- 53% -- disapprove of his approach. This includes 34% who strongly oppose it and 19% who just disapprove. On the other hand, 46% think the president's response is on the mark. Included here are 33% who approve and 13% who strongly approve. Just 1% are unsure.

Not surprisingly, Democrats and Republicans are on opposite sides of the spectrum here. 70% of Democrats agree with the way the president has managed the disaster while 70% of Republicans do not. Again, independent voters are more in agreement with members of the GOP. 62% report they either strongly disapprove or disapprove of Mr. Obama's response to the oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico.

Most Disapprove of BP's Handling of Oil Spill

President Obama isn't the only one under fire. British Petroleum (BP), whose rig exploded in late April, is also facing intense criticism. 83% of registered voters nationally either strongly disapprove or disapprove of how the oil company is handling the crisis in the Gulf of Mexico. This includes 60% who are strongly against their methods and 23% who merely disapprove. 17%, though, strongly approve or approve of their procedures. Included here are just 3% who strongly agree and 14% who like their approach. When it comes to BP's handling of the disaster, there is consensus among voters, regardless of party.

The Great Divide: Offshore Drilling Moratorium

A federal judge has overturned a moratorium placed on offshore drilling by the Obama Administration, but do voters want the moratorium in place? They divide. 46% support a temporary ban while 45% do not. 9% are unsure.

Democrats and Republicans have opposing views. 57% of Democrats support a moratorium while the same proportion of Republicans -- 57% -- opposes it. Nearly half of independent voters -- 49% -- are against the temporary ban.

Nature of the Sample: 1,004 U.S. Residents

This survey of 1,004 United States residents was conducted on June 17th through June 24th. Residents 18 years of age and older were interviewed by telephone. Telephone numbers were selected based upon a list of telephone exchanges from throughout the nation. The exchanges were selected to ensure that each region was represented in proportion to its population. To increase coverage, this land-line sample was supplemented by respondents reached through random dialing of cell phone numbers. The two samples were then combined. Results are statistically significant at  $\pm 3.0\%$ . There are 813 registered voters. The results for this subset are statistically significant at  $\pm 3.5\%$ . The error margin increases for cross-tabulations.
