This McClatchy-Marist Poll Reports:

Voters Want Compromise Across the Aisle, But Doubt It Will Happen

Now that Republicans have won control of the U.S. House of Representatives, more than seven in ten registered voters in the U.S. -- 72% -- think Republicans should work with Democrats and President Barack Obama to get things done while 25% say the GOP should stand firm on their positions even if things don't get done. Three percent are unsure.

Not surprisingly, most Democrats -- 94% -- think the Republicans should cooperate with the president and the Democrats in Congress to make progress on key issues, and 71% of independent voters agree. Republicans divide about what they think should happen. Among Republicans, 49% say the two sides should reach common ground while 47% report they should stand firm in their beliefs even if it causes political gridlock.

Although a majority of Tea Party supporters -- 51% -- want Republicans to stand firm, 45% think the GOP should work with the president and Democrats. Four percent are unsure.

However, when it comes to what they think will happen, just 28% of voters think the Republicans in Congress will negotiate with the president and the Democrats. Instead, 64% of registered voters believe the Republicans will hold fast to their positions. Seven percent are unsure.

Here, a majority of Republicans -- 55% -- think their GOP allies will stand firm while 37% say they will compromise. Seven percent are unsure. Among Democrats, 69% say the Republicans in Congress will stand against their colleagues across the aisle while 25% report they will work with them. Five percent are unsure. Similarly, 67% of independents state House Republicans will hold their ground compared with 26% who believe they will negotiate with the president and the Democrats. Seven percent are unsure.

Nearly six in ten Tea Party supporters -- 58% -- think the Republicans will remain steadfast while about one-third -- 34% -- say they will work with the Democrats to get things done. Eight percent are unsure.

Tax Cuts OK, But Not for the Wealthy

President Barack Obama is scheduled to meet with Congressional leaders tomorrow. A key item on the agenda -- whether to extend the Bush-era tax cuts. Where do voters stand on the issue? According to this McClatchy-Marist Poll, a majority of registered voters nationally -- 51% -- think the tax cuts should be extended only for the middle class but not for the top two percent, households earning $250,000 or more. 45% believe the tax breaks should be applied to everyone including the top two percent, and 4% are unsure.

When McClatchy-Marist last asked this question in September, 49% said the Bush-era tax cuts should be extended for just the middle class while 48% reported they should be extended to everyone. Three percent were unsure.

“This represents the first post-midterm election test of the nation's political leadership,” says Dr. Lee M. Miringoff, Director of The Marist College Institute for Public Opinion. “It comes on the crucial issue of finances and the economy.”

Partisan differences still exist on this question with 68% of Democrats saying the tax breaks should be extended to just the middle class and 62% of Republicans reporting they should be extended to everyone. Independents divide. 49% of these voters want the cuts applied only to the middle class while 48% think they should be extended for everyone. McClatchy-Marist found a similar partisan divide in its September poll.

Call for Compromise

As the debate between President Barack Obama and Republicans continues over the Bush-era tax cuts, a majority of voters want the two to find common ground. 53% want them to resolve their differences now while 42% think they should extend the current tax policy for two years. Five percent are unsure.

Democrats are more likely to think the issue should be resolved now with the Democratic Congress than are Republicans. 67% of Democrats think they should resolve their differences now while 57% of Republicans want the current policy extended for two years. A majority of independents -- 54% -- align with the Democrats on this question.

More Still View Economic Conditions as Inherited

President Obama continues to avoid blame for the country's economic conditions. 65% of registered voters currently believe he inherited today's economic conditions while 28% think they are a result of the president's own policies. Eight percent are unsure. In McClatchy-Marist's late October survey, 60% viewed the nation's economic issues as inherited, 30% blamed the president's policies, and 10% were unsure.

Half Full or Half Empty: Voters Divide About Future of U.S. Economy

When thinking about the future of the U.S. economy, 49% of registered voters think the worst is yet to come while 46% say the worst is behind us. Four percent are unsure. In McClatchy-Marist's late October survey, 45% were pessimistic while 47% said the worst was over. Eight percent, at the time, were unsure.

Among residents, a majority -- 51% -- think there is more bad news on the economic horizon while 45% believe better days are ahead. Five percent are unsure. In that previous survey, 47% thought the worst is ahead, 45% said the worst is over, and 8% were unsure.

Voters Not Satisfied with Health Care Law

It has been eight months since President Barack Obama signed the health care reform bill into law. But, most voters aren't completely satisfied with it. Surprisingly, however, about as many registered voters in the United States -- 35% -- want Congress to amend the 2010 Health Care Law so that it does more as those who want the law to be repealed -- 33%. 11% want it changed so that it does less while 16% think the law should stand in its current form. Five percent are unsure.

It's a partisan divide with independent voters squarely in the middle. A majority of Democrats -- 52% -- want the law changed so that it does more, and 27% want Congress to let it stand as it exists. Just 8% want it repealed, and 6% would like to see it changed so that it does less. Seven percent are unsure. Among Republicans, 58% want the law repealed, and 16% want it to do less. 18% would like it changed so that it does more, and only 5% want it to stand. Three percent are unsure. Looking at independent voters, 36% want the 2010 Health Care Law repealed, 12% would like it to do less, 34% would like it to do more, and 14% want it to stand. Four percent are unsure.

"This is a classic case of public opinion flying in the face of the conventional wisdom," says Dr. Lee M. Miringoff, Director of The Marist College Institute for Public Opinion. "Sure, most voters are not satisfied with the health care bill, but that doesn't automatically translate into support for its repeal."

Mandate to Buy Health Insurance Viewed as Unconstitutional

Nearly two-thirds of registered voters -- 65% -- think it is unconstitutional to require Americans to buy health insurance. 29% believe residents should be required to purchase coverage, and 7% are unsure.

79% of Republicans say the mandate is unconstitutional while 18% do not. Even a plurality of Democrats -- 48% -- believe requiring all residents to purchase health insurance goes against the Constitution. On the other hand, 41% of Democrats think Americans should be required to buy it. Among independents, more than two-thirds --- 68% -- believe it is unconstitutional while 27% say it should be a requirement for all Americans to buy health insurance.

Getting Specific: Voters' Views on Aspects of 2010 Health Care Law

While 65% of voters think it is unconstitutional to require residents to buy health insurance, voters have a more positive attitude toward other aspects of the law. When it comes to the part of the law that allows children up to age 26 to remain on their parents' health insurance, 68% think it should remain law while 29% say that dimension should be repealed. Three percent are unsure.

Almost six in ten voters -- 59% -- report the part of the health care law that prevents insurance companies from denying coverage due to pre-existing conditions should remain law while 36% want it repealed. Five percent are unsure.

And, 57% think the aspect of health care reform which closes the so-called “donut hole” in Medicare prescription drug coverage by providing assistance to pay for costs should remain in effect while 32% say it should be repealed. 11% are unsure.

Nature of the Sample: National Poll of 1,020 Adults

This survey of 1,020 adults was conducted on November 15th through November 18th, 2010. Adults 18 years of age and older residing in the continental United States were interviewed by telephone. Telephone numbers were selected based upon a list of telephone exchanges from throughout the nation. The exchanges were selected to ensure that each region was represented in proportion to its population. To increase coverage, this land-line sample was supplemented by respondents reached through random dialing of cell phone numbers. The two samples were then combined. Results are statistically significant within ± 3.0 percentage points. There are 810 registered voters. The results for this subset are statistically significant within ± 3.5 percentage points. The error margin increases for cross-tabulations.
