This McClatchy-Marist Poll Reports:

Expectations High for Second Half of Obama's Term

Midway into his term, President Barack Obama may be finding his political sea legs. According to this national McClatchy-Marist Poll, when asked about how the president will perform during his next two years in office, 61% of registered voters are optimistic, saying the president will do better than he did in the previous two years of his term. About one in five voters -- 21% -- think he will do a worse job, and 5% believe he will perform about the same as he already has. 12% are unsure.

A majority of independent voters -- 55% -- and even a plurality of Republican voters -- 41% -- think the president will make greater strides in his performance during the next two years than he has in the past two. Not surprisingly, most Democrats -- 85% -- also expect the president to do better in the future.

"Looking ahead to the next two years, voters are once again hopeful about President Obama," says Dr. Lee M. Miringoff, Director of The Marist College Institute for Public Opinion.

Also noteworthy, 35% of registered voters who disapprove of the president's job performance think he will do better in the second half of his term than he did in the first two years.

Obama Approval Rating Rebounds

Voters' positive attitude toward the president is reflected in his job approval rating. 48% of registered voters nationally approve of the job President Obama is doing in office while 43% disapprove. Nine percent are unsure. After declining to its lowest point at the end of 2010, the president's approval rating is back up. When McClatchy-Marist last asked about the president's approval rating in December, Mr. Obama's approval rating stood at 42%. Half -- 50% -- disapproved, and 8% were unsure.

The president has improved his standing among independent voters. Currently, members of this key voting group divide. 44% approve of the job the president is doing while the same proportion -- 44% -- disapprove. 11% are unsure. This is a notable change from McClatchy-Marist's December survey when only 39% of independents gave the president high marks, and a majority -- 52% -- shook their heads in disapproval. Nine percent, at that time, were unsure. The president's base has also solidified. 84% of Democrats approve of Mr. Obama's job performance while 9% disapprove. Seven percent are unsure. In December, those proportions stood at 74%, 21%, and 5%, respectively. Among the national GOP, little has changed. Nine percent approve of the president's job performance, 83% disapprove, and 8% are unsure. This compares with 7%, 87%, and 6%, respectively, who shared these views in December.

"President Obama is back on firmer footing politically," says Dr. Lee M. Miringoff, Director of The Marist College Institute for Public Opinion. "His Democratic base is more secure, and his improvement among independent voters is key."

Mr. Obama's support among women is also up. A majority -- 51% -- now say the president is doing well in office compared with 44% in December. Among men, 44% currently give the president a positive score compared with 39% last month.

Majority View Obama Favorably

Registered voters also have a more positive overall impression of the president. A majority - 53% -- report they have a favorable view of President Obama compared with 40% of those who say they have an unfavorable impression of him. Eight percent are unsure. Voters divided in McClatchy-Marist's November 24th survey. Then, 47% had a favorable opinion of the president while 49% did not. Four percent were unsure.

Independents make the difference here, as well. A majority of these voters -- 53% -- have a positive view of Mr. Obama while 42% hold him in low esteem. Five percent are unsure. The president's favorability rating has flipped among independents since late November. At that time, a majority -- 52% -- perceived the president unfavorably while 44% saw him favorably. Four percent were unsure.

Nation on the Straight and Narrow

President Obama is benefitting from a narrowing of the gap between Americans who think the country is moving in the wrong direction and those who think it is on the right course. For the first time since December of 2009, a majority of Americans do not think the country is moving in the wrong direction. Currently, 47% believe the country is traveling on the wrong path while 41% say it is on the right path, 12% are unsure. When McClatchy-Marist last asked this question in December, nearly six in ten adults -- 58% -- believed the nation needed to be re-directed while 34% said it was on the proper course. Eight percent were unsure.

Democrats are most positive. 66% believe the nation is moving in the right direction while 23% do not. In December, those proportions stood at 56% and 37%, respectively. Although a majority of independents still see the country as traveling on the wrong road, the proportion that share this view has declined. Among independents, 40% currently say the nation is moving in the right direction compared with 51% who think it is on the wrong path. In December, 32% said the nation was headed in the correct direction while 62% thought it needed a new compass. More than seven in ten Republicans -- 72% -- think the country is moving in the wrong direction. In December, 79% had this view.

Obama Leads Potential 2012 GOP Challengers

Looking ahead to 2012, when paired up against three prominent members of the GOP, Obama currently has the advantage.

First, when matched up against former Alaska Governor Sarah Palin, Obama outpaces Palin by 26 percentage points. Obama receives the support of a majority of voters -- 56% -- to Palin's 30%. 13% are undecided. When McClatchy-Marist last asked about this potential contest in December, Obama had a 12 percentage point lead over Palin, 52% to 40%, respectively, with 9% reporting they were undecided.

Among women, Obama has a 33 percentage point advantage over Palin. Among this group of voters, the president receives 60% to Palin's 27%. In December, the president garnered the support of 50% of women to Palin's 39%, an 11 percentage point difference. Looking at men, Obama receives 52% to 35% for Palin. In McClatchy-Marist's previous survey, 53% of men backed Obama while 40% supported Palin.

Obama also leads former Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney. A slim majority -- 51% -- back Obama compared with 38% for Romney. 11% are undecided. In December, voters divided with 44% backing the president and 46% supporting Romney. 10% were undecided.

Independent voters make the difference in this hypothetical contest. A plurality of independents -- 47% -- report they would back Obama while 37% support Romney. 16% are undecided. Last month, Romney had the advantage among this group of voters. At that time, 47% of independent voters were behind Romney while 39% said they supported Obama. 14% were undecided.

When matched up against former Arkansas Governor Mike Huckabee, Obama also outpaces his GOP challenger. Half of voters -- 50% -- support Obama while 38% rally for Huckabee. 12% are undecided. When McClatchy-Marist last asked about this contest in December, Obama edged Huckabee with 47% for Obama and 43% throwing their support behind Huckabee. 11% were undecided.

Obama's support has grown among women. A majority -- 52% -- now support Obama compared with 36% for Huckabee. 12% are undecided. Last month, women divided. 44% backed Obama while 43% touted Huckabee, and 12% were undecided.

This poll was conducted from Thursday, January 6th, 2011 through Monday, January 10th, 2011, including the Saturday when the tragic shooting occurred in Tucson, Arizona.

Most Say Compromise Key for New Congress... Fewer Predict Gridlock

According to this national McClatchy-Marist Poll, more than seven in ten registered voters -- 71% -- want to see compromise among political leaders in Washington in order to get things done. Nearly one in four -- 23% -- disagree and believe Congressional Republicans should stand firm on their positions even if it means there is a stalemate between them and the Democrats. Just 5% are unsure. Little has changed on this question since McClatchy-Marist's late November survey when 72% reported compromise should ensue, 25% thought Congressional Republicans should not waver on their positions, and 3% were unsure.

When it comes to what voters think will happen, a majority of voters -- 52% -- still believe Congressional Republicans will stand firm on principle. This is a decline from 64% who shared this view in late November. More voters now expect there will be compromise between the Republicans and the Democrats to get things done. 36% currently believe this to be the case while 28% thought Republicans would work with their Democratic counterparts and the president in the earlier poll.

"Voters have taken notice of recent legislative successes," says Dr. Lee M. Miringoff, Director of The Marist College Institute for Public Opinion. "But, there is still a wide gap between what voters want from our nation's political leaders and what they think is likely to occur."

On this question, independents play an important role. Fewer independent voters think Republicans and Democrats will stand firm against each other. Currently, 48% believe Republicans will hold fast to their views while 41% say members of the GOP will compromise with Congressional Democrats and the president. 11% are unsure. In McClatchy-Marist's November survey, about two-thirds of independents -- 67% -- did not think Republicans and Democrats would compromise while 26% said they would. Seven percent were unsure.

Most Unhappy with Health Care...But Only Three in Ten Want Complete Repeal

Republicans in the U.S. House of Representatives are expected to take action to repeal the 2010 Health Care Law, but are voters satisfied with the law? Just 14% of registered voters want the law to exist in its current form. 35% want it changed so that it does more, and 13% would like it altered so that it does less. Three in ten -- 30% -- want the law completely repealed. Nine percent are unsure. These proportions are similar to those found in McClatchy-Marist's late November survey.

Message to Congress: *Focus on the Deficit

A majority of registered voters nationally -- 53% -- think that Congress' top priority should be reducing the nation's deficit. Nearly one in four -- 23% -- want to see maintaining services and benefits play a key role, and 19% believe cutting taxes should be the most important item on the Congressional agenda. Only 5% are unsure. More voters place importance on the nation's deficit than last month. When Marist last asked this question in its December survey, 47% reported the deficit should be the top priority for the new Congress.

How the Survey was Conducted

Nature of the Sample: National Poll of 1,018 Adults

This survey of 1,018 adults was conducted on January 6th through January 10th, 2011. Adults 18 years of age and older residing in the continental United States were interviewed by telephone. Telephone numbers were selected based upon a list of telephone exchanges from throughout the nation. The exchanges were selected to ensure that each region was represented in proportion to its population. To increase coverage, this land-line sample was supplemented by respondents reached through random dialing of cell phone numbers. The two samples were then combined. Results are statistically significant within  $\pm 3.0$  percentage points. There are 827 registered voters. The results for this subset are statistically significant within  $\pm 3.5$  percentage points. The error margin increases for cross-tabulations. The days when the poll was conducted include the Saturday when the tragic shooting occurred in Tucson, Arizona.
